Last week we were looking at ways to improve our writing. Our topic was Prepositions. I gave the students a preposition that goes at the end of the sentences and the students had to write the beginning of the sentence

Below are two examples of year six students' work that was completed during a writing exercise lesson. The learning objective was to create a fable with a moral meaning at the end.

12 January 2021

LO: To write a fable that has a moral meaning at the end.

The old maidens moral girl

Olivia ~~Olivia's~~ Long ago, in a small village there lived a girl called Olivia. She and her partner Jack, worked in a shop with different types of things. Olivia was a stubborn and selfish girl while on the other hand, Jack was a lovely and kind boy. ~~One~~ One day an old maiden came by Olivia's and Jack's shop to buy some food. "May I have some bread please, I'm very hungry," asked the maiden. "Can you even afford to?" laughed Olivia. Jack was upset on how Olivia treated the old maiden, so Jack replied, "Oh it's free, you don't need to pay."

"Oh really? Thanks my dear how kind of you!" exclaimed the maiden. One hour later a straight-up business man came into the shop to get a bottle of wine. "Can I have a bottle of wine?" asked the man. Olivia said confidently, "Watch me make money instead of giving things for free. ~~What would you like that will be $20.99 please.~~" "Oh umm here... Now I've got to my meeting because terribly late." replied the man. "Huh? He didn't even leave a cent on the table!" said Olivia. The next day the old maiden came again.

"See? This is the kindest boy I've met, he's the one that gave me the bread for free!" exclaimed the maiden. She then said, "In return I'd like to buy the best wine you've got!" Olivia was ~~irritated~~ irritated and then said "Excuse me but I thought you didn't have money?" "Well actually, I just got a thousand dollars as a raffle prize!" shouted the maiden happily. "Thank's Ma'am! Come on and I'll show you the best wine we've got!" exclaimed Jack.

Moral of the story: Don't Judge a book by it's covers.

LO: To write a fable that has a moral meaning at the end.

The Countryside Girl and the Milk Bucket

A beautiful countryside girl was coming a bucket of milk on her head to sell at the market. She wore a dirty cloth and had fluffy, long, black hair. She wore a heavy wooden boot and mud on her knees. While walking, she began to daydream.

"If I sell all of my milk, I'll be able to buy a tray of eggs." she thought.

"And little chicks would hatch from the eggs I bought."

"At that time, poultry could sell for a good price. I'll use the money to buy a hen which will eventually end up giving me more chicks to sell. I'm going to make a lot of money."

"I'll use the money and buy me a pretty dress. What colour would fit me best? Green, I think. If I wore that pretty dress, all the boys from the plaza would want to dance with me."

"I'm not going to look at them, no matter how they beg me. I'll swing my head and walk away."

With this, the girl swung her beautiful, long hair.

She had quite forgotten that the milk bucket was still on her head.

With a 'SPLASH!' the milk bucket fell onto the ground and the milk slipped away.

"Oh, no! My beautiful green dress! OH, NO! My hen! Oh, No! My chickens! OH, NO! MY MILK!"

Everything is too late. The milk had slipped away, deep into the soil.

Have nothing to sell, the girl went sadly home.

Don't count your chickens before they hatch.

In Global Connections, students have been introduced to the topic of peace and conflict. So far they have been discussing different scenarios that could result in conflict or peaceful resolution, depending on the actions taken. Whilst at school, students were able to discuss (masked) face to (masked) face. Online, students find their own platforms to communicate ideas in small groups.

Scenario E

A neighbour who has recently been made unemployed has decided to start their own business, and has installed some machinery in a shed in their garden. When the machinery is being operated, the noise it makes can be heard in all the surrounding houses, and there is a smell in the air which all the neighbours can smell when they are out in their gardens.

Two different outcomes where the situation is resolved peacefully

Outcome 1

- Negotiate with neighbours, operate the machine without disturbing the people, and get the neighbours' understanding and consent.

Outcome 2

- Unable to negotiate with neighbours and find a place far away from the residential area to operate the equipment.

Cyberbullying is most commonly caused by jealousy and unsatisfactory between one another.

PHYSICAL BULLYING
Physical bullying is a form of bullying when one uses brutal force against another. This is usually very obvious and it often happens when one does not, nor can do anything back as self-defence and fight back. It has historically received more attention from schools than other more subtle forms of bullying.

VERBAL BULLYING
Verbal bullying is a form of bullying when one personally attacks another using their words. Ever heard the saying 'words can cut deeper than a knife'? That is exactly what verbal bullying is. Insults, name-calling and just hurtful words in general towards another are all examples of verbal bullying. Words can hurt as painfully as punches can.

SOCIAL BULLYING
Social bullying is a form of bullying when it is designed to harm someone's social reputation or cause humiliation. It is often carried out behind the person's back. Social bullying includes lying and spreading rumours, encouraging someone to social exclude someone, playing nasty jokes to humiliate, mimicking unkindly.

How Gratitude Changes You and Your Brain

Many studies over the past decade have found that people who consciously count their blessings tend to be happier and less depressed. The problem is that most research studies on gratitude have been conducted with well-functioning people. Is gratitude beneficial for people who struggle with mental health concerns? And, if so, how?

Gratitude Study

In a study, 300 adults, mostly college students who were seeking mental health help, were randomly assigned into three groups. Although all three groups received counselling services, the first group was also instructed to write one letter of gratitude to another person each week for three weeks, whereas the second group was asked to write about their deepest thoughts and feelings about negative experiences. The third group did not do any writing activity.

Those who wrote gratitude letters reported significantly better mental health four weeks and 12 weeks after their writing exercise ended. This suggests that gratitude writing can be beneficial not just for healthy, well-adjusted individuals, but also for those who struggle with mental health concerns.

How gratitude might actually work

- 1. Gratitude unshackles us from toxic emotions: It was the lack of negative emotion words—not the abundance of positive words—that explained the mental health gap between the gratitude writing group and the other writing group.
- 2. Gratitude helps even if you don't share it: In fact, only 23 percent of participants who wrote gratitude letters sent them. But those who didn't send their letters enjoyed the benefits of experiencing gratitude nonetheless.
- 3. Gratitude's benefits take time: Individuals in the gratitude group reported better mental health than the others four weeks after the writing activities, and this difference in mental health became even larger 12 weeks after the writing activities.
- 4. Gratitude has lasting effects on the brain: The gratitude letter writers showed greater activation in the medial prefrontal cortex - the brain area associated with learning and decision making, when they experienced gratitude in the fMRI scanner.
